China Aid Plan Recommended To The U.S. Senate

Washington, Mar. 26. US$463,000,000 Chinese-aid programme was formally recommended to the Senate today by the Foreign Relations Committee in a report which said that China's independence is "clearly one of the essential elements of peace in the Far East."

While the Committee acknowledged that the United States "cannot underwrite the destiny of China," it proposed extending to the Chinese a chance to undertake a "vigorous programme of self help."

REPORT OF THE AUDITORS TO THE STOCKHOLDERS. We have examined the above Balance Sheet with the books at the Head Office in London and with the Returns from the Branches open at 31st December, 1947, certified by the Branch Managers. No Returns are available as to the Assets and Liabilities at 31st December, 1947, of certain Branches which had not then been re-opened after enemy occupation, and the figures included in the Balance Sheet in respect of such Branches are those shown in the last Returns received; currency figures in such Returns have been converted into Sterling at the rates stated on the Balance Sheet. Under existing circumstances, it has not been possible to reconcile all outstanding transactions between re-opened Branches previously occupied by the enemy and the Head Office and other Branches. Subject to these observations, in our opinion the Balance Sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Bank's affairs according to the best of our information and the explanations given to us and as shown by the books at the Hend Office and the Returns referred to.

M3 is a totally new and scientifically prepared compound of manganese and extract of spleen, following exhaustive investigations for malarial control at the state-controlled Italian Biochemical Institute under the direction of Prof. G. Lorenzini of the Royal University of Milan.

M3 is not a substitute for quinine or its synthetic derivatives atabrin and plasmoquine, it is rather a new complement of these accepted medications and specifically attacks the hitherto unaffected sexual cycle of the malarial parasite's life to prevent relapses and recurrency.

M3 is recommended for all form's of malaria, acute and chronic, relapses and recurrency, for hemoglobinuric fever and for prolonged prophylaxis. Literature and complete instructions with each bottle.

AND THEN THEY GAVE The last hare shuttled home to HIM A GUN safety; the yelping from the traps died down. People bolted for the turnstiles, scattering toto tickets as they went. Then the boy's closed in on him from all sides, a grinning half-circle of faces, shutting off all escape. After they had tripped him, they kicked him. They left him for dead. But only his soul was dead. As he stumbled painfully away he vowed that from now on he'd do anything. He had been the Old Firm's runner for one afternoon. Checking the prices on the big bookies' slates, carrying them back to Charley, he bad misread the odds because he wasn't used to it. The beating was his reward.

It hadn't been a job with muchfuture, but deserters could never be choosers.

He couldn't think of anyone else who would give him work, unless it was Desker, and he knew what that would mean. Counting up, he found he had 10s. left.

So Desker was the last hope. He went to find him.

Deaker was "The King of Booze." He had a Guards moustache and a public-school accent. But Desker was deceptive. The off-licence that he ran was a going concern, and it ought to have been. The nightly bauls of warehouse whisky that were headlines one morning were part of his stock the next.

Desker looked for a long time at the boy in the dirty raincoat before he said. "You'll do."

The strong-arm man at his side nodded approval, laughing the forced, mirthless laugh that he'd been laughing all his life to prove himself a good Britain's outlaw army by living as one himself.

fellow. He had a diamond tie-pin and a Wehrmacht haircut; his name was Maxie

'You'd better go along and see Jacko now," Desker said. "He'll fix you up," and the interview was suddenly ended. It was Maxie who took him swiftly through the cold, murky alleys to the pub near Piccadilly.

· Fear clutched at his heart as they entered. All along the beer-slopped counter, through the smoky haze he could see the faces watching him; the broken noses, the thickened ears, and the fugitive, red-rimmed eyes.

There was Tiny Ted, with the white gardenia and the Homburg hat, who ran all the women round the London Pavilion. There was "Clatterfoot," once a boxer but punch-drunk and finished at 25, fondling the breastpocket fountain-pen filled with ammonia that he used as a weapon.

Lastly there was Jacko, and wherever there was Jacko there was fearfulness. Jacko was 25, Army deserter, ex-Gorbale muscleman. He had an impresive movie-menace face, a white, unhealthy skin like something bred in a cellar.

. It was he who had brought to Soho the new weapon of the bicycle chain, every link filed to razor-charpness. One swing of it could lay open a man's cheek, remove his eye or his car with ease.

All of them in varying degrees were "yellow boys." They needed a knuckleduster, a gun, or a razor sewn in the cap-peak before bravery was a part of them.

They talked to Maxie for a while, and they looked the new boy over. That was all. For two nights after that they let him sleep rough, eking out his last ten bob.

Then they had another "meet" at the pub. He heard details of a warehouse in City-road, a time, a place, and what he had to do.

They went to ground for 48 hours on the third floor of a lodging house in Waterloo: Jacko, "Clatterfoot," Tiny Ted, and the new recruit. 'A girl with a cast in her eye brought them their meals: They never left the house, never let the new boy out of their sight.

Once night Desker sent word from a club in South Kensington, and suddealy it was H-Hour at last.

They didn't go West again, "Skid" picked them up in the larry at halfpast twelve on Sunday night.

In the daytime "Skid" ran his own taxi, an Irish boy, who drove the getaway lorries on the side. Passengers complaining of his reckless driving never guessed the origin of the habit.

Tiny Ted carried a cosh, "Clatterfoot" had a knuckiedester, Jacko carried the deadly chain. The new boy had no weapon at all.

They didn't give him that until the lorry was shattering down the dead, lamp-lit City-road. By that time there was no turning back. The gun fells icy-cold as Jacko leant forward and banded it to him.

Three hours later a certain night watchman would struggis loose from his bonds and crawl towards the phone on hands and knees. Something would snap inside the new boy's skull and he would shoot.

He would be transformed overnight into a gumman, a man wanted one day for murder.

He didn't know that then. There wouldn't have been anything, to do about it if he had,

Peter Quennell Asks Can The Tiger Turn Into A Cat?

Between 1939 and 1945 a new form of aggression was perfected, named "psychological warfare." Teams, of eccentric experts, cosily established all over the country in inysterious little offices, laboured day and night-with occasional intervals for tea_drinkingto upset the enemy's nervous system, make the hair rise on his head, and cause his flesh to creep....

Since peace broke out only one of the Ailied Nations has remained psychologically aggressive. Russia's ability to puzzle and dismay us, and keep us always guessing, as a weapon of national policy is evidently worth several army corps. .

Attempts at conciliation having repeatedly failed we should disarm the Soviet sphing by trying to understand

Such, at least, is the opinion of Sir Paul Dukes, whom the Russian Goveroment, I imagine, would rank fairly high in its list of public enemies, but who has inherited from pre-revolution. ary times a very high regard for the genius of the Russian people.

COME HAMMER, COME SICKLE! IS AN interesting and illuminating bit of controversial literature, slightly spoiledso far as I am concerned—by Sir Paul's painstaking efforts to "write down" to his audience. He is conscientiously slangy, at times dismally facetious.

... His argument (which is an important one and, on the whole, remarkably well conducted) is east in the form of a series of questions and answers between the writer, a staunch trade unionist named Blackie, an odd. jobs man nicknamed Itba (abort for "It's that hum again!"), a militant Communist (whom the writer converts), and Matilda and Stephen, two rather vague young persons of the public school kind.

These puppets, it strikes me, are a considerable waste of space. There is no genuine clash of opinions, and when the party-liner squawks an indigment protest he is at once knocked off his perch by a rapid, effective swipe.

Notwithstanding these obvious drawbacks, "Come Hammer, Come Sickle!" is a book that deserves to be read. It contains a great deal of serviceable information.

Sir Paul's conclusions are characterised by a cautious long-term optimism. Thanks to his belief in the "mystical side of the Russian national character," he is convinced that "with time it is not Russia that will be Marxised but Marxism that will be Russianised into extinction. . . The Russian genius, however shackled today, is bound to triumph in the long run."

Sir Paul's educe that we should wait and sit with partient, firm, and fearless -is like suggesting that we must bide our time while the feline friend which has somehow developed into a tiger turns back into a puesy-cat.

The opening three-bid has always been more of a bugbear to the partner than to opponents. The bid is a losing bid when made on hands which are too weak in high cards. Opponents are then too strong to be shut out. The best opening three-bid is one which is made on a hand with the necessary high-card values (or nearly so) for a minimum opening bid as well as with a very long trump suit. It is not necessary that this long suit should be nearly solid. All that is necessary is that a modicum of highcard strength should be somewhere is the hand. North's hand below has about the necessary medicum.

North, the dealer, opened with Three Spades, at one table in a competition, and South bid Three No-Trumps, relying (as agreed) on finding some high cards in North's hand; otherwise, with a void in his partner's suit, the bid, risky as it was, would have been impossible. There were extenuating reasons for the bid: (a) the tenaces in South's three suits, (b) the fairly solid texture of his Clubs and (c) the strong probability of finding at least Hearta-10 x x in North's hand for a second guard. After the opening lead of the Six of Diamonds to dummy's Eight the declarer had no difficulty in making twelve tricks, the top score.

It is not always that the opener's suit in which he has made a threebid makes the best contract. It happens, not infrequently, that the partner has also a long suit, and a better one. It happens not infrequently, too, that where there are chances in other suits to establish long winners, as inthe case above, No-Trumps may make the best contract.

NEW FIRST LADY

BY SUE SHERIDAN

Hollywood has its rich and fabulous aristocrasy, its hardworking, peaceable middle-class and its struggling, poverty-stricken multitude. It also has its Queen, more plabelanly known as the First Lady. This exalted, if precarious, position has been held for varying times by past great actresses, such as Ruth Chatterton, Garbo, Ann Harding and Norma Shearer. Most recent wearer of the crown was titian-haired English Greek Garson who stepped, or slipped, from the throne last year to make way for the charming lady from Sweden, Ingrid Bergman.

Unlike her predecessors, Miss Bergman wears the mantle of screen royalty lightly, with all the un-selfconscious simplicity of true greatness.
There has never been a film queen quite like her. In her personal life, she is sweetly natural, uncomplicated and warmly feminine; in her screen life she can be any type.

No Repeated Roles

Luckily, she has escaped the type-casting which brought about the downfall of most former First Ladies, forced by their studies once too often to portray the epitome of Glorious Woman-hood. Since she came to Hollywood seven years ago, Ingrid Bergman has never repeated a role, hopes fervently that she will never have to do so and will probably reign longer therefore.

When David Selznick first brought the tall, tawny blonde from her native Sweden to play opposite Leslie Howard in "Intermezzo" she made an immediate impression—inbt as a "great foreign actress," but as a delightful new girl with beauty, charm and intelligence. Quickly she settled into the American way of life, and American movie-making, learnt English, and with a quiet competence swept through a variety of darzling roles. She has ranged the whole field from Creole vixen to pure nun, earrying off the 1944 Academy Award for her brilliantly moving performance of the young wife brought to the yerge of insanity in "Gaslight."

Played On Broadway

At present she is making "Joan of Lorraine," a picturisation of Maxwell Anderson's play about the Maid of

ST, JOHN AMBULANCE BRIGADE

Free Ambulance Service Hong Kong: Tel: 26093 Kowloon: Tel. 50000 Orleans, which Ingrid played, with notable success, on Broadway last year. For Ingrid it's a dream come true. She confesses that since she was a child of ten she has dreamt of playing Joan of Arc and for the past ten years has longed to do it on the screen. As well, she has a sirable investment in the million-pound production and reserved the right of approval or rejection on all the main characters selected.

Bergman's "Joan" has set the final seal on years of rumoured and projected screen versions about the life of Joan of Arc. David Selznick boped to do it with Jennifer Jones; now he has dropped the idea. Gabriel Pascal has postponed his production for two years. There's a current minor protrayal of "Joan" going on-Valli's appearance as the Maid in the movie within the movie in "Miracle of the Bells." Victor Fleming, director of "Joan of Lorraine," wonders aloud why they had to choose "Joan" for Valli for such a brief scene when it was known already that Miss Bergman was planning to play it.

New Hair Style

In the battle scenes, Ingrid, who started a new Joan of Arc bob during her six months' stage screen, will cut her hair short again. For the movie it will be just a bit more glamorousa fraction longer and more behind the ears. The screen story tells the life of Joan from the age of seventeen until she was burned at the stake when she was nineteen. Ingrid is really going to burn—they say—with the must realistic fire ever built on a sound stage. There was a rumor that Ingrid's eight-year-old daughter, Pia, had a part in the film with her mama. But Ingrid squashed the idea most severely on the grounds that it would probably spoil the child and make it hard for her to return to her ordinary life.

Ingrid keeps her own private life beautifully intact. She has been married since 1937 to Dr. Peter Lindetrom, who holds the important medical post of resident neurological surgeon at the Los Angeles General Hospital. But the couple get together at home on their respective careers are Dr. Lindstrom is said to be behind every business decision made by his wife.

So far, Ingrid has been extremely fortunate with her directors—she has had some of the best in the business, such as Leo McCarey for "The Bells of St. Mary's," Alfred Hitchcock for "Notorious," and Lewis Milestone for "Arch of Triumph." Shooting formally finished on the latter some fifteen months ago but in between Ingrid. with her co-star Charles Boyer, has been recalled time and time again for retakes. After "Joan" she will play "Eve" in Leo McCarey's "Adam and Eve" and is scheduled for Hitchcock's "Under. Capricorn."

With this future line-up, allied to her out-tanding acting talents. Ingrid Bergman should have no trouble at all in maintaining her position of the screen's First Lady.

If you harpened to catch a puttire called "Hungly Hill" mentits ago all with the likely to remember of it is a rendering of an alteress, Stobhan McKenna.

of what is known, I think, as an Unfortunate Experience.

She has only to look at them to make them want to be her lovers. Then she strangles them and rushes into the nearest church and plays the organ in a frenzy.

The melodramatic creepiness of all this is somewhat spoiled by its happening in and around a farm where agriculture is conducted with unbelievable gentility by people who appear to be near relations of the William family.

"Ensy Money" strings together four homely little fables showing the effect on four kinds of people of a big football pool prize.

The fun is simple and harmless, and I am sure that it wasn't meant to be anything more than that.

Aur Serial Story THREE FOR LUCK

MAJOR MIKE SULLIVAN, ex-policeman who became a war hero, has met

ARTHUR MAYO, millionaire racehorse owner, whose horse,

HAPPY MUNSTERMAN, is favourite for the Guineas and the Derby. Mike has foiled attempts to nobble the horse, aided by Mayo's daughter, .

MOIRA. Mile suspects a race-gang leader

DIAMOND HOTCHKISS, and his right-hand man,

TURKEY REDDIN, ex-all-in-wrestler. While Mike and Moirs are in Newmarket Mayo is kidnapped. Clues point to the gang's headquarters being in Brighton. In an attempt to free Mayo, Mike and Moira capture Reddin, who later escapes from the police.

IVANOFF, a rich bookmaker, also appears to be in the plot. Mike goes to Brighton. In an alley behind a public-house called the Turkey Run, apparently owned by Reddin, he overhears a talk between Hotchkits and a man who appears to be TEDDY ROYAL, Happy Munsterman's jockey, which makes him suspect Royal. Mike finds Mayo in a disused windmill in the grounds of Ivanoff's mansion on the Sussex Downs.

He found impatiently as he waited for the car to arrive. He dare not leave Mayo at the moment. The innkeeper was alone, and Mike knew that if the gang decided to try to recapture the millionaire they would not hesitate to use violent methods. Anyway, there was little that he could do, eince he did not know in which direction Moira had gone .-

'Urgent Call'

He frowned impatiently as he waited Mayo was sitting, to find him dozing. So he went out into the road to try to discover some clue to Moira's departure.

He had been waiting for about half an hour when the car from the garage arrived. Almost immediately on its heels were two other cars-big black vehicles that had the indefinable stamp of "police" all over their sleek bodles. From one of them emerged a uniformed inspector of the county constabulary. He approached Mike.

"Is there a Major Sullivan here" he queried.

"I am Major Sullivan," Mike replied. The inspector surveyed his bedraggled clothes dubiously at first-for Mike looked rather like a tramp at that moment-but finally decided to accept hlm.

"We had a top urgency call from Chief Inspector Doweswell at Scotland Yard," he explained quickly. "We had to contact a young lady-a Miss Mayo -at the lodge gates down the road. She directed us to the mill where ner father was supposed to be detained. But when we got there it was deserted, though we found signs of very recent residence."

Moira Safe

The inspector suddenly sneezed violently. "Including a confounded smell of pepper," he added testily.

"But where did you leave his daughter?" asked Sullivan.

"When we went back to the lodge gates she had gone. I've got two men up at the house asking Mr. Ivanoff's staff if they have seen anything of the men who were holding Mr. Mayo. It's very difficult for a gentleman like Mr. Ivanoff to have such a business on his grounds. They tell me the mill has been descried for years, and nobody ever went near it."

TRAVERS HUTCHIN

"What did Mr. Ivanoff himself say about it?" Mike asked grimly.

"Oh, he's not there. He spends most of the week in London-only comes at week-ends. I don't think he would be able to help us, but his staff may."

At that moment the innkeeper came out and said that he was wanted on the phone. He hurried inside.

It was Moira speaking at the other end.

"Oh, Mike, I'm so glad you're there. Are you safe and unburt, my dear?" There was a sob in her she said. voice.

"Fine. And I've got your father here too. He'll be all right after a good sleep. Everything's fine. - But where on earth have you got to?"

was only just dressed—this time in more normal clothes than those he had worn on his expedition-when there was a knock on the door, and Muira entered.

Phoned 'Yard'

She went to the bed and flung her arms round her father. Mike turned away, a lump in his throat. The devotion on their faces was too moving to intrude upon.

They talked for a moment or so in quiet tones. Mike gazed out of the window.

"Come here, Mike," Moira said softly at last. He turned to face her.

She put her arms round his neck and kissed him. .. He found himself holding her tightly to him, quite oblivious of her father's presence. When he finally looked over at the bed there was a quizzical but happy smile on Mayo's face. But he made no spoken comment

Moira sat on the bed beside her father. Her face was glowing.

"Now I must tell you my small pieces of news," she said. "When you had been away for more than an hour I phoned Inspector Doweswell at Scotland Yard. -He was a bit doubtful at first, but when I gave him the code 'a return for Rooney he jamped to the job. I told him I would wait at the gates of Ivanoff's house for the local police, whom he said he would ask to come out at once.

"When they came I showed them where the mill was, and waited. After a little while a hig American car came out at a terrific speed. I could see it "I'm in a phone box on the road | was full of men, but it was gone beto London. I'll tell you all about it fore I could see their faces. So I set

GRATEFUL THAT HER PATHER IS SAFE, MOIRA REWARDS MIKE WITH A KISS

I'm coming back right away. If you're both safe, I don't need to worry any more,"

Mike told her to go back to the Clipper Hotel in Brighton, to which the was taking Mayo. "And look after yourself on the way, my darling," he added. When he had rung off, he quickly outlined to the inspector the events of the day. He did not press the point of Ivanoff's complicity, merely suggesting that he should be questioned. But it was clear that the policeman could not think of the wealthy owner of the mansion as a crook.

"The man you have to look for is Turkey Reddin," Mike added. "Ask the Brighton police to watch for him. He owns a pub there, and he may try to go back, to it. He's wanted on various charges by the police in Lan-He broke out of the cells there."

"We knew about that," said the inspector. "But we didn't connect the Lancashire case with the Reddin in Brighton. I'll warn all police round here right away."

"One thing may be on our side there," said Mike reflectively. "I don't think Reddin knows that I have connected him with the pub at Brighton. There's just a chance that he may risk a visit."

After a few minutes! further conversation Mike took, his leave of the other. He helped Mayo out to the car, and soon they were once more on their way to the Clipper Hotel.

When they arrived he put Mayo into his bed and had a quick bath. Ho off after it. I was terrified it was the gang with you both as their prisoners." Tough Pair'

"And, what would you have done if it had been so?" asked Mayo with a tender smile ...

"Oh, I had a plan. I was going to wait until we came to some place where there was a lot of traffic behind us, and then crash the Bentley into their saloon. I guessed they wouldn't want to do much with a lot of people about "They're the kind who are only really tough when nobody is watching."

a"So you were going to-crash into them?" said Mike, quietly. "And what about your own car-and you?"

"Oh, I've seen police cars do it on the movies. I don't think it would have been very difficult. Anyway, you did it that time we caught Reddin."

Mike did not say anything. His eyes told of his admiration for her carefree courage.

"Anyway, I caught up with them after we had got on to the main road and managed to pass them. I tried not to stare too obviously—in fact, I couldn't stare for long, because I was doing over ninety miles an hour and had to watch the road pretty carefully. But I saw that you two weren't in the American car. So I waved gaily as if I were a mad young thing trying to show how fast I could drive, and then let them pass me and get away. Then I phoned back to the inn. That's all."

"That's all," repeated Mike in mocking tones. He looked at Mayo, Not

"I think you're a pretty tough pair," replied Mayo. "Heaven help this poor old man when you're . . .

But he did not finish that sentence. He smiled instead a knowing smile that made Moira blush.

In the morning Mayo was almost fully recovered from his ordeal. Mike suggested that they should set out for Newmarket early.

But before they left he searched in his notebook until he found the address of the little out-of-work Irish jockey to whom he had given a lift in the car. Without telling Mayo or Moira, he sent him a telegram.

Harry Fortescue was waiting eagerly for them. Mike had phoned that they were coming, and the trainer's face was one great beaming smile as he greeted them.

The story of Rubber

Now that the rainy season is mearly here, you will be looking out your macintoshes and galoshes to keep you

These two very useful articles are made of rubber, and you all know how many things rubber is used for in the world: today. It is taked in tyres; waterproof garments, tulies, hoseb, gloves, shoes, boots, robber bands, for sealing off doors, on hot water bottles, rubber flooring materials, springs, linings on brakes, etc., and hundreds of other things. So you see now important it

The first people to use rubber were: the red Indians of America. They collected it from the trees and played games with it because it bounced easily. When Christopher Columbus salled to North America he became the first European to learn about this wonderial gum, which the Indians took from the "Weeping Tree."

Columbus took it back to Spain with him, but apart from the fact that it would bounce back up again when thrown at the ground nobody knew very much about it. and they were not interested enough to experiment.

France, actually, was the first to find out more about this mysterious gum. In 1736 the French Academy of Science sent an expedition off to South America to find out more about this "Weeping Tree," The expedition came back very excited about it, and spread tales of how the natives made shoes and garments out of the stuff, how it kept the water out.

Europe started to make rubber shoes, too. But the first ones were very crude, and the rubber became quite sticky during the bot weather and very hard during the cold weather, and Europe was not very enthusiastic about it.

Then, about 1770, an Englishman called John Priestly, who also discovered the powers of oxygen, secidently rubbed a lump of the gum against his signature. He found that it would erase marks made by pencils. He passed bits of it out to his friends, and called them "rubbers."

One of the most important discoveries connected with rubber, was made in 1839, when Charles Goodyear discovered the way to cure rubber of stickiness and brittleness by adding sulphur to it and exposing it to heat. This process was called "vulcanizing" (the name was taken from the ancient god of fire, Volcan). From then on rubber was set on the road to progress, for it could be treated, shaped and moulded without impairing its unusual qualities.

The greatest rubber plantations before the war were in British Malaya, the Dutch East Indies and Ceylon. Rubber trees did not grow naturally there, but Britain, after trying to breed the trees in Kew Gardens, in England, transplanted them to Ceylon in 1876, where they flourished. Rubber trees also grow in South America. need a moist, hot climate.

The gum from which rubber is made is called latex, and comes from the Heven tree, A sloping ring is cut wound the tree, and a small bucket placed at the bottom of the groove. The bap runs down the groovs and into the bucket. When that groove is dry, another one is cut just below it, and then the bark has time to grow over the top one. That is why repber trees, if looked after do not run dry. Latex, when it is first taken from the tree, looks like the white sap from a dandelion. You know how sticky that is; don't you?

So far it has been quite expensive to produce synthetic rubber, that is, rubber that is made from chemicals and not from natural later. But as most countries of the world cannot grow rubber trees, they have to rely on either importing it or making their own substitute. America is farthest ahead in these experiments, but it has yet to be proved that synthetic rubber can better the rubber which was originally discovered back in the fifteenth century.

MAROONED ON AN ISLAND

by John Swaine

INSTALMENT III

One bright day in March I happened to be walking along the path we had cut through the underbrush. had nothing in mind, and just ambled aimlessly on. I blundered off the path without thinking, and was soon lost in thick undergrowth. I went on, and then suddenly came to a stop. -

A beaten track, evidently man made, lay in front of me, and when I realised that none of my mates had made this road, fear gripped me. I was alone in a strange place, out of sight of my friends, and with no knowledge of that part of the Island, and there I was greeted with a sign of human habitation. I wanted to return as quickly as possible, but I co quered my fear and continued on my way.

This new track was very hard to follow, and several times I almost lost it, but I walked on and on, grateful for the fact that I had brought my sou-wester with me to ward off the strong rays of the sun. The fear that gripped me at first gradually wore off, and soon I almost grew disappointed, thinking that perhaps this trail would not lead me to the excitement I crav-

I halted suddenly. The road had broken off. No further trail could be seen. I was about to leave when I noticed an almost-imperceptible opening in the ground, covered by leaves. I brushed these off, and saw before me a tunnel leading underground. It took me two seconds 30 make up my mind. Then I dropped into the shaft, feet first.

I fell about four yards, and landed on a pile of dead grass. Regaining my balance. I peered around and gradually my eyes became accustomed to the park. I could at least see that the tunnel led straight on. I was just able to crawl through the narrow opening, and groped my way on through the darkness.

Then the tunnel rose sharply. crept up it, and was auddenly blinded by strong light. When I could see I looked around me, and received the greatest surprise of my life.

I found myself in a small but, but what surprised me more was that the shack was filled with gold and what I book to be precions stones, strangest of all-human skulls!

Gradually I built up enough courage to grasp the handle of the door and posh it open. I was in a great rocky space. Boulders piled high over one another, and hid the cabin from view. As I climbed the rocks and hurried over the boulders, a strange idea fisshed through my head, and lent wings to my feet. I knew what I expected to find at the end of my trail, and I was right.

After haif, an hour of hazardous travelling through a forest, I came upon the beach I had sought. I had not been mistaken. There in front of me was a little landing-place. truth was that . I had hit upon the hiding-place of Black Patch, the most notorious pirate of our time. nefarious deeds were known to all seaman, and his cruelty was feared by all. I was: thoroughly scared now, and started off along the sandy beach.

But I was discovered, and trapped. I could see four figures approaching me, and closing around me in a circle. Four heavy bodies pounced on me, and tied me up roughly. Then a heavy blow descended on my head, and I fell unconscious.

THE PROMS

Although, with the possible exception of the first work, tonight's "Proms" concert from ZBW is not Easter music, it is, in spirit and feeling, in keeping with the occasion. Four works are being presented:—Rimsky-Korsakov's overture "Easter," Op. 36; Cesar Franck's "Prelude, Chorale and Fugue," with Cortot at the piano; Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D. Op. 36; and three songs from Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius,"—"Be merciful, O Lord," "Take Me Away" and "Lord, Thou hast been our refuge."

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV

One of the most brilliant of the Russian nationalist composers of the last century, Rimsky-Korsakov (1844-1908) wrote this overture in 1888, the same year, incidentally, in which he composed "Scherherazade." It is partly mystical in treatment, but is largely an evocation of the pagan rejoicings which mark the celebration of Easter Day in Russia—which, by the way, does not fall on the same day as it does in the rest of the Christian world.

The overture was written when Rimsky-Korsakov had already reached his full stature as a composer and over 12 years after the great Tchaikovsky had paid tribute to him with the words "I am a mere artisan in music, you will be an artist in the fullest sense of the word."

He was a composer who thought about music, but did not always feel it. As Calvocoressi points out, "music was to him all make-believe." In his autobiography, he gives us a clue to his own feelings when he says he had a gift for music and enjoyed "playing with it." His music may, occasionally, not be quite convincing, but it is always distinctly interesting. In the words of Rosa Newmarch, he was "a thinker, a fastidious and exquisite craftsman, an artist of that refined and discriminating type who is chiefly concerned in satisfying the demands of his own conscience rather than the tastes of the general public." -

FRANCK

The story of Cesar Auguste Franck (1822-90), of how he spent years of his life turning out music which is now fortunately forgotten, of how he found himself yet still failed to achieve recognition, has been told only recently in these pages and does not require repetition.

Though he wrote much that was triffing or ephemeral, Franck occasionally did hit it off, and nowhere is this better seen than in his "Prelude, Chorale and Fugue," which is not afraid of being judged with the best works ever written for the piano. Even the way it came to be written is perhaps symbolical of the paradex that was Cesar Franck.

He wrote in his final period, after finding himself at the age of 50. He started out with the intention of writing a prelude and fugue in the style of Bach. and the subject is definitely Bach-like. The chorale was an afterthought. Like Rimsky-Korsakov, Franck took a deep interest in the constructional side of music and the result was that what was possibly intended to be a somewhat slight work eventually developed into something bulkier and more complex in form than the average sonata! There may be a blemish or two for the purist to pounce on; most of us, however, are simply swept off our feet by this great work for the piano, with its sustained interest and its constant call on the performer for the utmost in keyboard technique.

BEETHOVEN

Beethoven (1770-1827) wrote his Second Symphony in D towards the end of 1802, the work being performed for the first time the following year. Although it is blessed with one of the lovellest slow movements of any symphony, its chief interest for me is the way in which it fills in the gap between his First Symphony—by no means as Mozartian in manner as some would have it—and the great Third or "Eroica" in which Beethoven attained his unassailable position as the world's greatest composer of symphonies.

ELGAR

For some ten years, Elgar (1857-1934) pondered over Cardinal Newman's poem. Then, in 1900, he came out with his oratorio "The Dream of Gerontius," a setting of the poem for solo voices, chorus and orchestra which has since been acclaimed as his masterpiece.

Its first performance at the Birming-ham Festival in October of that year, however, was a comparative failure—as neither the conductor (Richter), the choir, nor the critics knew quite what to make of it, being puzzled by the new choral idiom in which it was written. A translation by Julius Buths, entitled "Der Traum von Gerontius," was accepted for the Lower Rhine Festival and performed at Dusseldorf two years later.

It was greeted with acciamation, Richard Strauss himself expressing in a public speech the approval of Elgar's contemporary composers on the Continent. It was put on again in England with great success and in 1903 the London Choral Society came into being for the purpose of introducing it to the capital.

The oratorio is a poignant account of the struggle between life and death and the music unfolds a tremendous vision of judgment and eternity. The first part of the work tells of the death of Gerontius and how his soul sets forth on its great journey into eternity. This part of the work is a most astonishing and entrancing composition. The second part, with its angelic choruses, does not quite seem to live up to what has preceded it, but this may only be because anything after the first part must necessarily be an anticlimax unless a composer can achieve the impossible!

Y CONCERT

The next YMCA gramophone concert will be held at 8.15 p.m. on Tuesday. The programme will consist of:—

"Espana" (Chabrier); concertos No. 2 in B.flat and No. 4 in F, for organ (Handel); "Mother Goose" suite (Ravel); and symphony No. 31 in D ("Paris") (Mozart).

RECORDS

Bach's "Sleepers, Wake!" (Wachet auf, ruft une die Stimme), a chorale with variations, orchestrated by Bantock, has been recorded by Columbia (DX-1388), the performance being by the City of Birmingham Orchestra, conducted by George Weldon. An indifferent performance recorded adequately. This is noble music, and should flow, instead of percolating or oozing. The pace is so funeral one couldn't blame the sleepers if they slumbered on.

A far better performance is that of Sir Malcolm Sargent and the Liverpool Philharmonic in Vaughan Williams' romance for violin and orchestra. "The Lark Ascending." David Wise is the soloist (Columbia, DX 1386-87).

It will be noted that the work appears in four parts. Until records are a thing of the past and one is able to hear a wire-recorded symphony played through from start to finish without interruptions, one has to accept the present limitations of the gramophone. One is entitled to assume that the gramophone companies will do their best to see that "breaks" are kept to a minimum. Columbia, however, use all four sides of two records, whereas both HMV and Decca used but three.

It is interesting to compare Vaughan Williams' "The Lark Ascending" with Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune." One recent critic has pot it on record that Vaughan Williams does what Debussy brilliantly near-missed!

"KING HARALD"

A dramatic opera in three acts, "King Harald," by Anders Emile, had its world premiere in the Hunter College Play-house, New York, a few weeks ago. The libretto was written by Pearl Cleveland Wilson, of the Hunter College classics department. It deals with a story laid in Norway at the time of the Vikings.

Dr. Emile, composer, is a graduate of the National Conservatory of Music, Oslo, and is director of the Hunter College Choir.

QUOTE

"With regard to the general panorama of music in London, in spite of my earlier pessimism. I believe that there are some really bright spots on the English musical horizon—the policy in film music...the progressiveness in musical education, the magnificent work of the amateur choral societies, the enterprise of the BBC's. Third Programme, and the pump-priming policy of the Arts Council of Great Britain (the channel for official subsidies to art, music and drama)"—Dr. Hubert Chifford, in a recent talk from the BBC.

MUSICAL FUND

The Musical Fund Society of Philadelphia has been accepting applications for auditions from students of piano, woodwind, stringed instruments and organised ensembles. The society's purpose is "the advancement of music by introducing talented young musicians to the public." The winners of the auditions will make their debuts at the Philadelphia Academy of Music—the public being admitted free to ensure a large audience! Solo recitalists are also given an award of $200.

The society was formed in 1820 and is the oldest American organisation of such a nature in existence. It was established by "a group of gentlemen who met weekly to play, for their own enjoyment and that of their friends, the quartettes of Beethoven, Boccherini and other composers." Many famous singers and musicians have appeared on its programmes.

QUOTE

"It is fair to try and put oneself into the place of the people who run the BBC, and also of the musicians who do not get as much say there as we should like them to do. Their bosses (like, it would seem, all bosses that on earth do dwell) more or less fear the public, and don't know now to win its confidence. Perhaps we are more touchy and suspicious, now that all but the hopeless unrealists face the fact that man is a sad, mad, bad piece of work, largely unfit to manage his affairs. (I could endure him better if he were not so immodest about it). Governments, however, need never expect gratitude: that was the remark of a ruler who, if wise in little else, yet showed horsesense in the saying. The BBC is happier than a PM. It gets some praise, even from its keenest critics: most, I think, from those of us. who probe deepest into its curious constitution and limited life."-W. R. Anderson, in the "Musical Times."

Father Of Modern Brain Surgery

(FROM ARGOSY)

The man on the table in the operating room was suffering from a tumour on the brain. Swiftly the surgeon and newly graduated intern made an opening in the skull and cut away the growth. A few hours later the patient died. That was in 1895. In those days nine out of ten patients failed to survive brain surgery.

Twenty-five years later the young intern, Dr. Harvey Cushing, who had become one of the great surgeons of all time, had reversed the odds: nine out of ten patients survived brain operations. Ultimately he did even better; he drove the brain-tumor mortality rate at his own clinic down to 6.8 per cent.

The world almost missed receiving the benefit of his great gifts. When he was in Harvard Medical School it was regular practice for second-year. students to administer ether. Cushing had served as anaesthetist only a few times when one of his patients died in the middle of the operation. Cushing blamed himself and decided to leave medical school. Friends persuaded him to change his mind.

Two years later he and a classmate, Amory Codman, devised a simple method of preventing ether tragedies. On a chart they recorded the patient's pulse and respiration so that the anaesthetist knew at all times whether his patient had a sufficient margin of safety. Their ether charts are still in

The tenth child of a physician, Harvey Cushing was born in Cleveland. Ohio, in 1869. As an undergraduate at Yale he was a good but uninspired student, fond of sleight-of-hand, and a member of the baseball team.

But medical school worked a profound change in him. In surgery the nimble-fingered Cushing found his true vocation. He was graduated cum laude in 1895.

Studies

He spent four years at Johns Hopkins Hospital under the famous surgeon- William Stewart Halsted, then went to Europe for a year of advanced laboratory research. At Bern, Switzerland. Theodor Rocher, one of Europe's foremost surgeons, suggested that he study the inter-action of brain pressure, - respiration and circulation. By inserting a transparent "window" in a laboratory animal's skuli while. the animal was anesthetized, the young surgeon made observations' that later proved of vital importance.

He discovered, for instance, that when the pressure-of the cerebro-spinal fluid within the head increased, the arterial blood pressure normally rose with it, always to a slightly higher level. If arterial pressure failed to rise above brain pressure, the blood supply to the brain was cut off and death followed.

Here was an important reason to keep an accurate check of every patient's blood pressure. But most doctors had little interest in blood pressure, and knew of no practical instrument to measure it. Cushing began a search, making hopeful inquiries at all the great-European clinics, tracking down-every-chance report. Finally-at a hospital in Payia, Italy, he found an - ingenious - blood-pressure - recorder. When he took a model back - to the United States, his American colleagues pronounced the apparatus of no practical value in diagnosis. Today, thanks largely to Cushing's youthful missionary zeal, no doctor doubts the significance of blood pressure as a barometer of health. The inflatable armlet Dr. Cushing found in Italy is familiar to everyone who has ever had a physical examination.

New Instruments:

Meanwhile he was busily inventing new surgical instruments: improved burrs and saws for penetrating the skull | cleanly, a pneumatic head tournic quet to prevent hemorrhage from the scalp-a condition which had defeated many an earlier experimenter in braintumor removal.

Early brain surgeons had stressed the need to perform cranial operations quickly. But Cushing's meticulously planned operations averaged three to four hours each. He insisted that not speed but protection of the delicate tissues was important. In later years, with his introduction of electrosurgery, Dr. Cushing shortened his operating time by at least one third.

Dr. Cushing's monograph on surgery of the head, published in 1908, made a profound impression among medical nien in Europe and America. Almost singlehanded he had created a new surgical specialty.

Early in his practice Cushing made pituitary gland, then only dimly understood one of his chief interests. Suspecting that short mellion of the ture were connected with bermones secreted by the pitulary, de studed the case histories of circus giants, midgets and lat ladies. One summer when his wife was away to assembled a houseful of midgets and conducted a series of growth experiments, In 1912 he published The Pitzilery Body and Ite Disorders, in which he proved that the pea-sized pituitary was the intester gland in the mechanism of human growth.

Pituitary oversecretion in mature persons causes acromegaly a cruelly deforming overgrowth of the hands, feet and jaw-and its victims are then menaced by blindness because of pituits ary pressure on the optic nerves. Surgical intervention was clearly indicated. Cushing realized, but the pituitary, lying deep behind the eye sockets, was perhaps the body's most inscressible organ.

Medical annals listed only a single successful pituitary operation, by Viennese surgeon who had operated through the forebead and ifrontal sinuses. In 1909 Cushing repeated this operation successfully, but he perceived a serious drawback in it the date ger of sinus infection reaching the brain.

He found a safer route through the sphenoid, the odd-shape hous screeture behind the nose. Lifting a patient's upper lis and striking in shore the upper jaw, he resched the pitukary without touching the sinuses. Cushing's transphenoidal approach saved handreds of acromegalic patients from blindness and gross deformity.

Cushing's especity for work seemed inexhaustible. He would dictate correspondence for several hours even morning, then perform a four- or livehour operation. Late in the afternoon, munching buttered toest, he would write his meticulous post-operative notes, examine new patients and make his hospital rounds. Except on special occasions, he wrote every night from eight to 12-perhaps a medical paper or address, or part of a book. He regularly set down between 5,000 and 10,000 words a day, several times the output of most professional writers.

in France

At 43, Cushing became professor of surgery at Havard and surgeon in chief of the new Peter Bent Brigham Hose pital. In 1915 he went to France to help organize Allied - neurosurgery During this brief trip Cushing med 3n electromagnet to remove a shell fragment from a French soldier besig Surgeons had tried the device before with little or no success.

Discreding the conventional was sixed probe. Coshing thoic an neubsite six inch mail rounded of its point and fitted the nail to the end of the magnet, Three times he inserted the magnetic ed hall along the petit of the wound, but failed to dislodge the shell freement. On the fourth try the neil wes inserted three and one half inches into the soldier's brain. When Cushing slowly withdrew it, the clusive fragment of Jagged steel hong, at its tip.

After America's entry into the war Dr. Cushing was commissioned a major and took a surgical team overseas. At home he had considered a sincle brain operation a day's work. At the front he tackled as many as eight a day. operating by candlelight when air alerts shut off power. Through it all he kept painstaking records of every. case.

In August 1918, at Chateau-Thierry, Cushing came down with polynemities an obscure infection of the nervous system. Numbness crept up beyond his knees; then his sure, quick fixeers became so stiff that he was unable even to botton his shirt. Harvey Coshing wondered whether he would ever operate acain.

In 1931 Cushing performed his 200th brain-tumor operation: A year later. at 63, he reached Harvard's retirement age. Returning to his first aims mater, Yale, he devoted his last years to research in medical history. He died on October 7. 1939.

Since then many hailliant surgeous who had studied the Cushing technique have carried his methods all over the world.

Washington, Mar. 25. President Truman today appealed for an immediate truce between the Arabs and Jews in Palestine. At the same time, the President remained firm on the question of a United Nations trusteeship over. Palestine, to take over from the British when the mandate is terminated on May 15.

Speaking at his press conference, the President said: "If we are to avert a tragedy in Palestine. an immediate truce must be reached between the Arabs and Jews of that country. I am instructing Ambassador Austin (Mr. Warren Austin, the United States delegate to the Security Council) to urge upon the Security Council in the strongest terms that representatives of the Arabs and Jews be called at once to the Council table to arrange such a

"Violence and bloodshed will descend upon the Holy Land; large-scale fighting among the people of that country will be the Inevitable result. Such fighting would infect the entire Middle East and could lead to consequences of the gravest sort, involving the peace of this nation and of the world."

President Truman continued: These dangers are imminent. The responsible Governments in the United Nations cannot face this prospect without acting promptly to prevent it.

"The United States has proposed to the Security Council a temporary United Nations trusteeship for Palestine, to provide a government to keep the peace. Such a trusteeship was proposed only after we had exhausted every effort to find a way to carry out partition by peaceful

"Our regard for the United Nations, for the peace of the world, and for our own self-interest does not permit us to do less." Regarding the possible use of American troops to back up the United Nations trusteeship, President Truman said that it was the policy of the United States to back up a United Nations trusteeship by every means necessary, but that this did not necessarily mean the use of American

The President said he was still in favour of partition and that there was no change in his atlitude towards Jewish immigration into Palestine.

British Assertion President Truman was asked by a Reuters correspondent if the United States had asked Britain to continue in Palestine after May 15. President Truman sharply on the correspondent and snid: "Of course we didn't want the British to leave." He said the British were supposed to stay until August 15, but the British "suddenly decided to leave on May 15." He did not know why. Pausing as if for thought, he added that he did not run the British Government either. That last remark was lost in the laughter of correspondents. He was asked to repeat his answer, which he did slowly."

"Inaccurate" After the press conference, officials told Reuters the President's implications that the British had agreed to stay on in Palestine (until August 15, and then changed their minds, was inaccurate." They said there had always been two dates in the British plan—the May date for the termination of Britain's mandatory responsibility and the August date for winding up the evacuation of British troops. After May 15, Britalii would be responsible only for preserving order in so far as it was necessary to protect their own troops

It is understood that though Generalissimo Chiang upheld their stand as constitutional, he had intended to persuade some of them to give up their seats in favour of minority parties by an appeal for party solidarity.

Their blunt refusal to see the President has further aggravated the dispute, particularly, when the Assembly convention is only three days off as scheduled.

The same delegates assembled in the National Election Office yesterday afternoon demanding formal accreditation.

BRITISH MERCHANTS TOLD: EAVE SPAIN ALONE"

London, Mar. 26. Paul Berthon, ace economic investigator of the British Export Trade Research Organization, who has just returned from Spain where he surveyed economic possibilities for British industrialists, said today that he had found the country "finely balanced between bankruptcy and the chance of a prosperous future."

Mr Berthon spent a month in certain import restrictions on Spain talking to businessmen "luxury goods", but he recomand Government officials. He told the United Press today that he found the alternative to bankrupicy was merely "chance" to get back on the road that would lead to prosperlly.

He said he would recommend that British businessmen "leave Spain alone" until the political situation is more settled. He did not think it would settle sufficiently for British business to retransformed his Government to a democracy that would fit the United Nations formula.

Two Obstacles

Mr Berthon said he found two major obstacles to doing business in Spain:

due primarily to the heavy cuts taken by the Government. He said he saw the books of several Spanish concerns and was tounded at the high percentage of revenue drained off by the State. The result has been, he explained, that prices are correspondingly high and cannot compete abroad. Labour costs are low.'

(2) Currency restrictions, which make it difficult to exchange Pesetus into foreign curreacy to pay dividend outside Spain on foreign capital,

He said despite this the Spanish was skipper of one of the fishing boats involved in the raid Wedpossible for British firms to do nesday night, 35 miles east of 2750 000 000 temainder of the business in Spain by excluding imports of spare parts, although permitting the entry of some heavy machinery.

The reason behind this, he said, was that Spanish industrialists were making cheap copies of many of these parts.

Buffs Swamped By South China The only surprise in yesterday's Senior Soccer programme was the defeat of Navy by R.A.F. at Causeway Bay by one goal to nil. On the run of the play, Navy should have won, but weakness in the forward line was their undoing.

South China followed up their convincing midweek victory over Sing Tao with another runaway win over Buffs by seven goals to nil at Sookunpoo. At Boundary Street, Kwong Wah, who have been showing improved form of late, had no difficulty in accounting for Inniskillings.
